Philadelphia K .- N. Convention.

A correspondent of the New York Herald give: the following account of the Philadelphia Convention. We select from the Herald because the Ky., held at the Court House in Greensburg, on editor has been nursing up this new party in hopes | Saturday, June 2d, 1855, to take into consideration of making something out of it: SECOND DAY-AFTERNOON SESSION.

Aldermen, on Friday night, a resolution was reported from the Common Council, directing the City Engineer to give the probable cost of repairing the Portland market house. Our readers will perhaps recollect that some four or five weeks ago, we called attention to the condition of that house, and urged the building of a new one in its stead, and on a lot—not in the street. We are still hope full the Council will see that economy, taste, and consideration for the beauty and usefulness of Portland Market street call for the removal of the house from the street, and the erection of a new comfortable, convenient, and neat house, on some lot.

We have been trying, for two or three years, to convince Councils that the eity has no more right to use the streets for the erection of houses than private individuals have. We have tried to persuade them that the markets would be better in every way if located on some lot than the street. Thus far, our labors have been in vain. We hope, however, and that the event of laws, our labors have been in vain. We hope, however, and the proceedings of the land was and the lattern of the meeting of citizens at Jeffersonown, Ky., as published in the Louisville Democrat of April 25th, and then by the election of Seward, and then by the election of Wilson, that the Southern men to face the music, and let the Southern men to face the music, and let the Southern men to face the music, and let the Southern men to face the music, and let the Southern men to face the music, and let the Southern men to face the music, and let the Southern men to face the music, and let the Southern men to face the music, and let the Southern men to face the music, and let the Southern men to face the music, and let the Southern men to face the music, and let the Southern men to face the music, and let the Southern men to face the music, and let the Southern men to face the music, and let the Southern men

There is no shirking out while the South is represented by such men as Col. Bolling, of Virginia, and Mr. White, of Missouri. Rayner seems to have lost caste with the Southern delegates. They see that in his anxiety to make capital (with the forlorn hope that he will be the candidate of the forlorn hope that he will be the candidate of the council for the Presidency i with Northern members, he will jeopardise the interests of the South. The consummate vanity of Rayner, in supposing that he has the remotest chance of being the nominee for the Presidency, is ridicaled by all its Southern colleagues. No Whig will get the nominee for the Presidency, and no man, of any party, who has ever held office. These two ordinances are of great importance, especially the latter. The election has been ordered, we believe, for the last Saturday in this month, and it is time the voters were considering the question. If the vote is against confirmation the city will lose the $60,000 already paid, as well as be through the convention, this afternoon, and asking Southern members to tread on the tail of it. Look out.

There will be like devil to pay before the Conneil gets through, The loss of Virginia suggests the necessity of holding on to the North, and as the downright rejection of Wilson & Co. may lose the North in a diversion to the Seward continuous tion, you will see that the case requires delicate steering to avoid the breakers. I think Wilson desires a split. He seemed to be dragging his coat through the convention, this afternoon, and asking Southern members to tread on the tail of it. Look out.

RV SARAH J. C. WHITTLESEV. lle is the noblest little creature,

Now wandering afar: 1 used to call bim softly, 'teacher,' While thrumming the guitar. He has a large and loving eye, The leveliest soft blue. And then his silken hair-I'll try

If you have ever seen the sunshin: Come drifting faintly down, Through green leaves of the eglantino, Upon a patch of brown.

Then you may see his tresses shining, That grace his little crown, Just point blank like that golden Ening, Beneath the shade of brown. Then, he's the gentlest little thing, Beneath the bright, blue sky;

Precisely what the heart will cling to; And only just—so high.
That is, if you should draw a whip-cord
To take the altitude of young lord—

Unless he stooped a foot, to measure And went with cautions tread, I'm very sure, that little treasure Would bump his golden head? I never saw his snuny face, once,

Without a plensant smile; le uever called me 'stupid dun c,' Because I 'missed a mile.'

But if I'd skip a single string,
Or touch an F for II,
A sky-blue glance he'd upward fing.
That said, plain us could be—
Oh, nunder! but I'm so much smaller,
Although you do not well,
Because you're fifteen inches taller.

The biario, of the 21st nlt., published a denunciation from Senor D. Mannel Noriega, dated "Morelia, May 14, 1855," in which he says:

By express received to-day at this Commandance, from his Excellency, the Minister of War, I had the satisfaction of learning that H. M. S. H. arrived yesterday at the Jipunce estate, with the main body of the army under his command, without the slightest novelty, and without the revolutionists having appeared anywhere on the route, notwithstanding the arrogauce with which, in order to impose upon the unwary, they declared they

Within the shady, flowery glade. She wandered till the sun had set, And in the valley lingered yet, Then roamed along, that beauteous child To gather flowers bright and wild. Night's shades were closing o'er the earth, And yet she heeded naught but mirth; There were so many pretty flowers That quickly passed the fleeting hours; And then the birds, they sangso clear, She wished mamma was there to hear.

At length, too tired to further roat To find the homeward path again, And oh! it now was almost night And home, dear home, was not in sight. She wandered on in wild dispair Far thro' the grove, she knew not where, Till lost and weary as could be, She fell asleep beneath a tree.

The moon was gliding slow and bright, And o'er the earth it shed its light. And shoue upon a pleasing seene So radiant, lovely, and serene. But in that grove there was a throng That searched the trodden path along; Oh! they were seeking for that child, Whose mother's heart with grief was wild! They'd sought till many an hour passed on To find the little wandering oue.

At length, within a distant glade, They found the little rover laid; And there a bunch of flowers wild Was in the hand of that fair child. Oh! it had guthered those sweet flowers, Thro' all the bright long evening hours, And now the moon was gliding on, And shining o'er that slumbering one. The mother's heart with joy was wild When there she found her darling child.

In life there's many a tempting joy, That lures the soul but to destroy; And many a one is thus beguiled, Aud led astray like that young child. There's many pleasures bright and gay That woos the heart but to betray; But yet affection's fond control May save the wayward, wandering soul; And the by tempting joys beguiled, May yet be rescued like the child. Louisville, Ky., May, 1855.

The Sympathizing Woman.
